Signs of the Times

The outstanding event in society of the past week was the engagement of Mr. and Mrs. James W. Sloan, who announced their engagement at the home of the bride's parents on Saturday afternoon. The couple are the son and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Linton of this city. The group picture and that of little Katherine Brown are from the studio of Misses Lewis and Brown.

by the casual layer of books. Of course there are the people who are literate readers and who spend most of their spare time within the folds of a book. Mephisto's Musings in Musical America of recent issue brings a popular version of Sinclair Lewis' late book, "Main Street." Those who fail to read Mephisto in his musical meanderings along musical lines are missing one of the best books of the country's most faithful critics. That he rises pre-eminently to the front as a connoisseur otherwise in speaking in clarifying terms of one of the most widely read and talked-of books, is most interesting. Mephisto says in part: "The tragedy and humor of the situation are provided by the fact that there is ample proof to sustain everyone of his charges, to make good the virulence that he has practised on those who live in "Main Street," fortunately it is not the whole story. He has only shown us one side of the struggle, the struggle which we have in this country is against hypocrisy, profiteering, business dishonesty, the small chance given to the individual, the callous indifference to the interests, indeed rights of the other man, all of which, however, are not peculiarly American traits. You can find them in Europe, you can find them in the best cities of the United States. Do you want to judge this country fairly? Then note what has accomplished in less than a century. It has given millions of poor peasants, soldiers, officers of all kinds who came here with a new hope to the world the priceless gift of opportunity. Here is the Jap in green silk, as well as the Irish, the Scandinavian got his chance. Here the down-trodden Polish Jew could find protection and above all liberty and justice. Here he was not exploited by a merciless autocracy."

This effort the clever author exemplifies in the frank but forcible terms of the cultured wife of a country physician who runs the community with a high hand. His book is his master's fact though conscientious husband, to something like the status of this cultured European city, of which by the way there are not so many as people think.

As I said, it is not the whole story. If you want to get at what I would call the real American life outside the great White Way, the factories and office buildings, the great mansions as well as houses in the environs, among these who escape every night to their homes, most of which are beautiful, surrounded by gardens, where there is a lovely social life, in which music plays a great role.

You will find it, too, among the more or less notorious, the meretricious, scandal-loving women of a small town of a few thousand inhabitants in Minnesota. He describes with skill the colorful conceit of the golden grounds about Morgan's Inn, the black club at Spavinaw and other nearby resorts where the wealthy crowd who never tire of doing things seem to go on this annual day of dooms. The rich, sunburned ladies and gentlemen, who are the only feature so far announced for the social scene. With the very informal home affairs among the younger crowd who never tire of doing things seems to be the sum total of calendar announcements for the day.

Sometime brings a great selection for books. If one should interview or interview, a better term, the hearer or most any seller of popular reading matter, doubtless he will learn that either the dead or the living who never tire of doing things seems to be the sum total of calendar announcements for the day.

"Main Street" is the story. "Main Street" is typical, he says of tens of thousands of other Main Streets in other cities. He might better have labeled it "The Curse of Calvinism." Sinclair Lewis holds on to the body which he has operated upon to the
